

Scenarios–What Would You Do?

Directions

Select one of the three scenarios below and prepare a step-by-step response demonstrating your leadership and organization skills as well as your team building skills.

1. Students in your health science class have been invited to participate in a health fair at a local healthcare facility. Your teacher is extremely busy. Although she thinks it will be a good opportunity to showcase the health science program and HOSA chapter, she does not have the time to make all of the arrangements. These will include; parent permission slips, transportation, confidentiality orientation and signed confidentiality agreements, team assignments (students will be visiting different presentations in four small groups), and four chaperones to accompany the students. You really want your class to participate. What will you do to help make the trip possible?
2. Your HOSA chapter has doubled in size this year and all of the members want to participate in the state leadership conference (SLC). They have worked hard in all of their classes so their grades are excellent. Absences will be excused for the days needed to attend. They have worked hard and are confident in their leadership and competitive event skills. HOSA members believe their commitment and time spent practicing may earn them medals in several categories. The SLC is 400 miles away and money needs to be raised to cover transportation, registration, hotel and food costs. All members are willing to do their part but the efforts need to be organized and assignments determined. How will you lead the effort to ensure all interested members are able to participate?
3. You are interested in completing an application to seek national office at the upcoming HOSA National Leadership Conference. One of the criteria is to demonstrate your leadership ability. Also, the university you would like to attend gives high points for leadership skills and activities in the admissions process. It is a very competitive university and you want to do your best to position yourself with high probability to be accepted. What will you do to build your leadership skills during this next school year and to help you achieve both goals?
