

What You Want Others to Know About You

Directions

How many times have you heard or said “I didn’t know that about you”? Often there is just not the opportunity to share things about ourselves that we would really like others to know. Maybe you have a really great singing voice or you are a talented musician and would like to play in a band. Perhaps you love to write stories and hope someday to be a published author. Maybe you want to join the golf team but your family does not have money for you to buy clubs. Maybe you have a great idea for a science project but need a partner that is also interested. Or you might be unable to participate in after school activities because you have to care for younger brothers or sisters. Maybe someone in your family is ill and needs your help. Or maybe you could just use a friend now and then.

By sharing things about yourself, you will find others that may have the same experiences or can offer assistance. You may be asked to join a band or someone may have a set of used golf clubs you could use. Someone may have a relative in the media or publishing business.

1. Think about what you would like others to know. Write down a couple of thoughts. Only share what you are comfortable discussing.
2. Participate in a round table sharing conversation lead by your teacher. You may be surprised to learn what others wish to share and you may find that you have things in common.
